Saint of the Week

St Leo the Great (c.391-10th November 461 A.D.)

Leo was a from a Roman aristocratic family from Tuscany. The Roman Empire was collapsing and administrative roles had begun to be taken by Christian clergy. As a deacon, Leo was well-known and respected, being sent by the Emperor to Gaul to mediate a dispute. In 440, while in Gaul, Pope Sixtus III died and Leo was elected as his successor. He worked hard to promote the truth of the Christian faith especially against the heresies of Manicheism (which argued that good and evil were balanced in a cosmic struggle, and denigrated marriage) and Pelagianism (which claimed you could earn heaven without God's grace). Leo is most famous for his contribution to the Council of Chalcedon, defining the way Christ's divine and human natures related to one another. He also stove to bring stability amidst the collapse of Roman power, famously convincing Attila the Hun to leave Italy, but couldn't prevent the sack of Rome by the Vandals in 455. Leo died on 10th November 461 A.D.
